5 years of Blogging

Yes, I have been blogging quite some time now. This blog started in June 2004. I have even been published on wikipedia as a Dutch Blogger both on the English and Dutch versions (see:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Category:Dutch\_bloggers and

http://nl.wikipedia.org/wiki/Categorie:Nederlands\_blogger ). I have been working with computers for a long time (since I was 15 years old) and have witnessed a lot of changes in the field. For me the creative use of the computer technique was always a challenge. Also these days I am learning new ways to use the computer and see upcoming changes. The Mail-Art network is now quite alive on the Internet. But what counts is still the pieces of mail-art that we sent through the postal system. The Internet just makes the time-factor interesting. We can discuss and see what the other mail-artist is getting and sending. Also the basis of this blog. You can witness the last 5 years of my mail-art activities.....

Why Photo's and no Scans?

Bruno Capatti (Italy) wondered why I am now taking photo's instead of Scan's of the mail-art I receive. Well, there are 2 reasons. The first one is a time-problem. There was a pile of unpublished mail-art that still had to be digitized, and the photocamera is the fastest way to do that. The second reason is that the concept of mail-art can best be seen of a photo. One gets the idea of the piece being mailed and also can discover the content when that is placed on the photo. Just let me know what you think of this.

Mail from Jack Latteman - USA

Jack Latteman sent me a card that was returned again in this envelope. Seems like the postal system plays games still when they receive something they don't get through their system...

New answer from Ray Johnson

Michael Ward from USA sent me an interesting letter. He is currently researching the Ray Johnson collection and discovered a piece of mail that Ray Johnson prepared for me but that never got sent. It is the next question for the Mail-Interview I did. As documented the mail-interview was never finished (see:

http://jas.faximum.com/library/tam/tam\_34.htm and

<http://www.iuoma.org/interview.html> for the details). He reacted to my letter and directed towards Alison Knowles (who I actually interviewed too: see:

http://www.fluxusshedelberg.org/interviewwithalisonknowles\_v1.3.pdf).

New Interview

On <http://rjinterview.blogspot.com/> you can read my answers to a new interview that is taking place. On this blog the concept is simple. I get a lot of requests of people who want to interview me. On this blog the question is placed with the answer. If someone else leaves a comment with a new question, I will answer that as well. That way it becomes an interactive interview. Also older questions that are asked are available for others too. Eventually the complete result will be published as well.
